A Unified Heart in Battling Typhoon and Protecting Campus

Dear teachers and students,

Super Typhoon “Mangkhut” battered Macao over the weekend, leaving the city with severe flooding, falling trees, broken windows, tons of debris, and property damages. The University management team responded immediately, setting up a special work team on September 13th. Several emergency meetings were called for, and created an emergency contact mechanism to handle any issues. The Macao Judiciary Police was invited to a special information briefing session providing “evacuation plans for low-land residents during typhoons” for the university teachers and students, drawing on last year’s experience. All this pre-preparation proved to be effective in getting the campus community prepared for Typhoon Mangkhut. Residential students in the University dormitories received prompt and useful safety information via various ways to alert their awareness of the natural storm. Staff and students worked together to reinforce doors and windows; frontline staff worked around the clock, patrolling the campus and taking measures to clear any potential hazards. Such effective work reflected the M.U.S.T. spirit, working together as a team to safeguard everyone and to minimize potential damages to campus facilities.

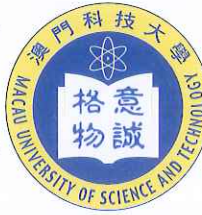

On behalf of the University, I’d like to offer my sincere thanks to the University management team and the colleagues who have been working hard on the frontline. I’d also like to give the sincerest regards to all the university teachers and students.

The massive typhoon did leave damages to some campus facilities; our frontline colleagues already performed repair work. The University hardware facilities will soon resume and all teaching arrangements will be
